Why Study Art

“Thanks to art, instead of seeing a single world, our own, we see it multiply until we have before us
as many worlds as there are artists.”

Marcel Proust

Why do artists create art? They want to communicate with other people. They want to express their ideas and feelings. When we study art we learn what artists think about their world. We see the personal emotions and memories artists want to share. We compare their feelings to our feelings and look for ideas we have in common.

As we see what ideas and feelings artists express, we learn what their values and beliefs are. Values are social ideas – principles, standards or qualities people consider desirable or worthwhile. We see what social ideas – courage, wisdom, justice, equality, respect, and individual freedom – are important to artists. Values are shown in a culture’s artworks by the qualities they show in their people and leaders and the stories they choose to show about their lives.

Beliefs are spiritual or religious ideas people accept as true. We see what spiritual beliefs guide artists’ lives: who created the world and why, there is a higher power, good conquers evil and there is life after death. Early Western civilizations had many different religious beliefs. In the last two thousand years, the majority of people have held Christian beliefs with many following the Jewish and Muslim faiths.

As we study art, we learn what individuals and what cultures think is beautiful. Values and beliefs influence what people think is beautiful. Every culture defines beauty in its own unique way. Most people think something is beautiful if it brings pleasure to the heart, the eyes or the mind. The most beautiful artworks appeal to all three, our heart, our eyes and our mind.

Artworks that affect our emotions, touch our memories or illustrate our beliefs and values appeal to our heart. Colors, lines, shapes, space and texture appeal to our eyes. Values and beliefs influence what artists show about their heroes and history. Those stories and stories about artists, their culture and why they created their artworks appeal to our minds. Some values and beliefs you will agree with; but you will not agree with others. The PowerPoint presentation will show you many different artworks and how values and beliefs influenced what was beautiful – what appealed to people’s hearts, eyes and minds. In this unit, you will explore what is beautiful to you and what values and beliefs appeal to your heart, eyes and mind.
